

The Ovarian Cancer Canada Walk of Hope takes place on September 9, 2018* in more than 35 locations nationwide. This is the country's largest event to raise awareness and much-needed funds for overcoming ovarian cancer.

Ready to walk?

Unique from other events, the Walk focuses attention and fundraising on Canada's most serious women's cancer. Honouring the experience of women with ovarian cancer and celebrating the hope of thousands of Canadians for a future without this disease, the Walk represents an important community tradition. Founded in 2002 by volunteer Peggy Truscott, the Walk has continued to grow steadily each year. Since its inception the event has raised more than $25 million for support, awareness and research initiatives felt across the country and beyond.

Powered by community

"Following my surgery and treatment, I walked in the Ovarian Cancer Canada Walk of Hope. I felt very strongly about fundraising and giving back to the medical and research community in gratitude for my care. So I had a discussion with Professor Jim Petrik, a researcher specializing in ovarian cancer, about starting a Walk for our community. We joined forces as co-chairs and were thrilled by the success of our first two walks. Here's looking forward to this September."

The Ovarian Cancer Canada Walk of Hope is led by community champions who are committed to calling their communities to action.

- At each participating location, a committee of volunteers organize the very best event possible in partnership with local businesses. Their efforts ensure costs are minimized and participation is high.
- A family-friendly event, the Walk typically offers participants their choice of a 2.5 km or 5 km route. Fun runs are also growing in popularity at selected sites.
